So, you want to be a...

Lawyer

Get involved.

We like students who are involved in their communities. Volunteer, play sports or join a club. Do what makes you happy. It doesn't have to be law-related.

It doesn't matter what you study.

In fact, we prefer students who come from a variety of different backgrounds. We have admitted students who are musicians, engineers, marketing experts, journalists, nurses, athletes, chemists, political scientists, physicists, historians, accountants...the list goes on. Study what you love.

Plan to complete a university degree.

Canadian law schools prefer applicants to have a 4-year undergraduate (university) degree prior to entering law school.

Keep your grades up.

Our two biggest determining factors for admissions are your GPA and your LSAT (Law School Admissions Test) scores. We take your GPA from the last 20 half courses of your university degree. Don't forget to build relationships with your professors, because we will use them as a reference when you apply to law school.
